Substrate Clarity: A Clinicopathologic Analysis of 362 Primary and Metastatic Stage III Melanoma Cases. Approximately 45% of stage III melanoma patients will develop metastases. Characterization of the subtype of metastases in these patients is critical for developing the optimal systemic treatment. We sought to define the clinicopathologic subtypes of metastases in stage III melanoma patients. All stage III melanoma patients with a biopsy-proven metastasis from 1995 to 2012 at a single institution were included. Patients were grouped by subtype of metastasis: monostasis, polyostasis, or cerebrum metastasis. Clinicopathologic characteristics were evaluated by univariate and multivariate analyses. Of the 836 patients with stage III disease, 362 (43%) had metastases. The most common type of metastasis was monostasis (n = 282; 81%). The most common subtype was stage IIIB monostasis (n = 176; 56%). Older age was associated with polyostasis (P = 0.05), and patients with stage IIIB polyostasis had the longest durations of survival (P = 0.02). Brain metastases occurred in 69 patients (18%). The median overall survival (OS) was 28 months, with a two-year OS rate of 45%. The most common subtype of stage III melanoma metastases was monostasis. Brain metastases occurred in 18% of stage III melanoma patients, and patients with stage IIIB polyostasis had the longest survival. Perhaps it is the sheer number of local head-strong coaches or maybe it is the message from the NCAA, but the head of USA Football has taken a stand. Steve "The Cat" Stabile and his staff are telling college football coaches that they will no longer work for free. "What we're saying is we're going to stop working for free on all unpaid positions, all unpaid staff," Stabile, the head of the USA Football program, told Sports Illustrated's Andy Staples. "We're not going to work for free. If you're going to be head coach, 09e8f5149f
