But instead of letting the big tech players dominate the user experience experience, it's beneficial to everyone that three rivals compete more than they cooperate. The fear is that in a race to the bottom the big tech companies aren't going to introduce new features that benefit all of their users. However, Apple will be the first to drop a new exclusive deal for the upcoming iPhone X. An anonymous source told 9to5Mac that the new phone will only be available through Apple Stores and for pre-order with certain carriers. It's a sensible move and will allow the iPhone X to be sold for significantly less money at $999 (although a locked phone has an upfront cost). With a price tag in the hundreds of dollars, a company's customers will be able to put off buying as long as possible in order to save money and still get a great smartphone. However, they'll also be missing out on some of the improvements that will help their phone last longer. The iPhone 7 and iPhone 7 Plus, which are already on sale for less than $500, already feature wireless charging technology called AirPower. Yet, it isn't compatible with all wireless chargers, so the iPhone X will feature the feature as well. We don't know what improvements will be introduced in the iPhone X yet, but it's clear that the budget devices Apple sells could see new features added in time for the iPhone X.Cannabis Use in Patients with HIV: A Systematic Review.
