VividDesktop Crack [Updated]

Simplify your desktop management with Vista-style desktop environments in GNOME. Virtual Desktop adds a number of tools for handling multiple virtual desktops (hence the name of the app), including support for locking or unlocking all desktops, switching between desktops, closing windows, and more. VividDesktop is a free desktop manager for Linux and Windows, developed in the GNOME libraries. Its main goal is to provide a new way of handling virtual desktops, an area of the OS which is usually avoided by most users. More specifically, the application brings the elements of a desktop environment directly to the desktop, such as a full-screen taskbar, lockable apps, hotkey options for quickly switching between desktops, window-specific tasks, and more. General Provides virtual desktop management Allows you to switch between virtual desktops Allows you to remove one or more desktops Provides a number of desktop environments Add hotkeys for switching desktops Allows you to define your own desktop views How to use Install the application and then open it to see a welcome page. The interface is divided in several windows, one for each virtual desktop. Each window shows a list of active programs. By default, the desktop environment includes a wallpaper for each desktop, a taskbar, and a dock. Hotkeys are assigned to make it possible to close windows, lock or unlock virtual desktops, move windows between virtual desktops, and much more. All operations can be performed from the tray icon. There are four main actions available, including creating new desktops, displaying the desktop, opening or closing windows, and moving windows between virtual desktops. The application allows you to define a number of desktop views. These are stored in a separate file, so if you don't like a certain view, you can easily create a new one. Every view is made of widgets and windows, which you can define in a file for each view. You can also assign hotkeys for certain actions, such as moving a window to a specific desktop. By default, the application offers a number of predefined desktop views, but it's possible to create and save your own. Note that you can't close the application, but you can easily disable it in the system tray. However, you can safely remove it once you're done. Criticism The application isn't able to do anything else than providing virtual desktop management It offers a number of
