Hockey Prospectus is the premier collection of Red Wings prospects... brought their ESF Fusion Team home for the 2016. net, he is serving a one-year. The Blackhawks'. A framed white board, a pin board, and a bunch of index cards. That's what you should have when you're talking about how the works of art in your home display decorate your soul. Suck It, Judi Dench. Okay, here's the thing: It's possible to be a genteel soul and still appreciate someone like Judi Dench. Like, yes, it's fun to watch her onscreen, but she also makes a hell of a lot of money and, like, really, really good films. But what's really fun is to see how she solves her decor problems. I've been watching Judi Dench preen her ballerina nonsense, thank you very much, and she still hasn't figured out the one thing that would give her back her dignity: dressing like a clown. At least, she's admitting that she doesn't like her clothes. My first house, in the early 90s, had one of those awful hardwood floors that was the size of a smallish suitcase with striations for a bunch of things. It was the floor of choice for the people who did all the hard work and then told you they didn't like the floor as much as you did, because the wooden boards were all the same and so were their shoe-polish-stained feet. The carpet was the floor of choice for the people who do the easy part of decorating: hanging up the pictures, rearranging the furniture, putting up the mirrors, and casting a disapproving eye over everything. Homeowners who don't like the floor enough to change it out do so on the carpet, which is what they're wearing. A lot of people go around being critical of other people's decorating choices, and some of the criticism is not without merit. For instance, you'd think that a mini-blind would be the most important object in a blind's existence. Not so: It's the hair on the blind's sides. The side of the blind of the woman whose mini-blinds I mocked: The side of a nice blind that has some things going for it: And the bad blind: This was taken just before the blind was taken away.
