The present invention relates to a process and apparatus for detecting the presence of hydrocarbons in the environment and, more particularly, the invention relates to an apparatus and method for detecting the presence of such hydrocarbons in the ambient air for use in fire prevention. The emission of pollutants from various sources, such as automobiles, gas-burning appliances, airplane engines, etc., has become a source of public concern. Among the many deleterious pollutants which cause pollution is carbon monoxide. Carbon monoxide, which is typically found in combustion products of wood and coal, results in poor health in people who are exposed to high concentrations of carbon monoxide over long periods. Accordingly, there is a need for a safe means for detecting high levels of carbon monoxide in a person's environment. In addition to carbon monoxide, other hydrocarbons present in the air can also be harmful to human beings and must be detected. Certain hydrocarbons, such as benzene, formaldehyde, and toluene, are common indoor pollutants
