Organizing your photos You can organize your photos by album or set. An _album_ is a container that holds your photos together. You can create as many albums as you need. An album is a file with the.Album or.Albums extension. You can create and save albums with the Windows Explorer or File Manager. To begin creating an album, open the Windows Explorer and select Organize. The Organize window will appear. From here you can choose to create a new album or open an existing one. Click the button that says New Album to create a new album. The Organize window will reopen. Choose the folder from the My Computer window. Click the red album button. When you're done with the album, choose Save. You will be prompted to save the album in a new file. Choose Save and put the file extension on it. To open the album, open Windows Explorer and choose the new album. Choose Save to file from Windows Explorer. In Windows Explorer, choose the folder containing the album. Click the file button (3.1) on the toolbar. Click Save to open the file in your Windows Explorer. You can also save an individual photo and then put all the photos of that same subject into an album. You can copy and paste a group of photos, or you can open multiple photos in Windows Explorer at once and copy them. You can also open multiple images at once in Adobe Photoshop Elements. After you copy and paste a group of images, you can choose how to set them up. You can create a single album for the group of images or use the usual way of setting up albums by dragging them into one album. You can also select the show a preview check box (3.2) at the bottom of the main window to see thumbnails of your images.

Q: How to apply while or even on the output of a multiple map function? I am using multiple mappers to get the same data in a set of keys. I want to transform this data before sending it to one of the mappers based on a condition on the key. Doing this: `final Map<>> eventResults1 = parseOutput1(string1); final Map<>> eventResults2 = parseOutput2(string2); final Map<>> eventResults3 = parseOutput3(string3); final Map<>> eventData = new HashMap(); eventData.putAll(eventResults1); eventData.putAll(eventResults2); eventData.putAll(eventResults3);` This works, but I'm asking myself if this is the correct way to do. A: You can use the following code to merge an arbitrary number of Maps: `Map<>> merged = new HashMap(); for (Map<>> map : maps) { merged.putAll(map); }` You can even merge Maps of different types. See the Javadoc for the interface `LinkedHashMap` (or `HashMap` if you use Java 8 or later). (1) Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a magnetic recording medium applicable to a magnetic disk for use in a computer, a video cassette tape, etc., and a manufacturing method thereof. (2) Description of the Prior Art A magnetic recording medium comprises a non-magnetic support and a magnetic layer applied thereon. In general, it is obtained by applying a magnetic coating composition thereon, drying the resulting coating, and optionally forming a protective layer on the coating surface. Since the magnetic coating composition should be applied as thinly as possible in order to form a magnetic recording medium of high recording density, it is desired to use a coating liquid in which magnetic powder particles are dispersed in an organic solvent without using a dispersing agent such as alky
