Multi-platform Socket Support;..Q: HTML5: using target an element does not work I am just trying to redirect to other html page using tag. It was working perfect with chrome, but not working on mozilla and IE. I have played around with the code for a while, but could not get the real reason. LOL A: This is by design. This is a security feature - you cannot guarantee it will work across all browsers. When you open a new window, you should have the top level window, by default. A new top level window simply means that you have to call window.open to get one that will allow that link to open. Using this feature, you will generally get the browser warning popup. You can prevent that warning from appearing by adding `target="noopen"` to your links. It is pretty clear that the designers of HTML5 wanted that kind of design.

By the way, you shouldn't actually use the `href` attribute for your links. You are using this more or less correctly: LOL This generates a new link, but it will not actually navigate. Q: Can we trigger the Write event with `UpdateApplicationRoleRequest` `0cc13bf012`

I have a prefab that I use as a house prefab. I want this prefab to be able to navigate inside my game world. I have a method to get the position of the prefab in the world: public class Movement :

MonoBehaviour { public Vector3 position { get; set; } public void
MovePrefabTo(Vector3 position) { var transform = this.transform;
    Vector3 newPos = position - transform.position;
    newPos.Normalize(); transform.position = newPos; } } However, this only moves it if I place it very close to my camera. I want it to move from any point in the game space. A: Is that your prefab in one of your scripts? If so I would just call the MovePrefabTo() method in your Update() method. Otherwise you need to figure out some logic that will tell if your prefab is very close to your camera or a good distance away. public class Movement :
MonoBehaviour { public Vector3 position { get; set; } public void
MovePrefabTo(Vector3 position) { //Do calculations to determine distance if(calculations > distance) { //Move the prefab
