I have a site that has a few pages that are in maintenance for a long time. Those pages are all just HTML, JS, and CSS files so they can hardly take a long time. I was wondering if it was possible to make those pages spawn in a separate process (probably using Image::Magick?) so that they do not tie

"The new fantasy RPG is about to make its jump to the platform of PS4, and it's called Elden Ring. The setup for this game is simple, there are three factions that have been scattered to the four corners of the land and the evil Loki is hot on their heels. This means that we have to take sides, so we shall bring this conflict to a close and see which faction ends up in the lead. This is a good thing because it means that there's going to be conflict and the decisions we make are going to be important. It's also an RPG as we can characterise, customize, and equip our characters while on the move. We can also set our minds to tasks to get better at them, whether it's learning new skills or finding new information, we have the ability to do this as we encounter new challenges. Elden Ring is a game where these different elements combine to create an RPG experience that certainly keeps the juices flowing." -Games Review "I was really excited to play this game from the moment I heard about it; it's the sequel to the original game, which just introduced a day/night cycle to the day/night cycle of the original game, and this expands upon this idea, creating a world with seasons that have an impact on the game. What's really interesting is that Elden Ring keeps all the feeling of the original game, but builds upon it with a few interesting ideas that make this game stand out." -Japanese Games Nite "Elden Ring is an attempt to bring this classical genre back to consoles, with an emphasis on its online elements, which are perfect for the days of November. The game is quite good, but not unbeatable in the genre, which has a lot of cliches that make the game slightly unbearable to play; Elden Ring doesn't have the time to carry it out, but at the same time, it tries to be as authentic as it can be. Yet this is not so simple, the story is deep and carries a lot of weight; it's quite difficult to have a clear understanding of it. The online mode isn't so intuitive, and can take time to properly develop as it's a game where you have to put in a lot of time." -Turin Times "Elden Ring is a 2D, side-scrolling fantasy RPG that revolves around three factions, each with a particular view of bff6bb2d33

OTHER – Prologue The hot summer was invading the cool night as the fireflies light up the plain, the clear night sky was filled with stars and moon…it was a beautiful night. Music was played from the lively town. A man wearing a long cotton shirt and dark pants walked slowly and quietly, the moonlight gleamed on his face as he was going towards the house. He felt something touching his hand but he did not pull his hand back. The stranger turned around and looked into the stranger's eyes. The strangers eyes were shining and calm. The man whose eyes were shining showed the information. The name of the stranger was an unknown person, his appearance had a detailed description and his way of life was taken down like a diary. Where would this unknown person be going to? Why did he hope? These were questions which couldn't be answered. The stranger had no idea about all of that. The only hope the stranger had was his sword. He walked further on. The stranger's sword was like a shell which completely protects the warrior inside.
