Hack Facebook Password.Q: SQL Developer - for each row, keep only the newest value of a column I'm not sure how to word this question, but hopefully I can get some help. I have a table called ADDRESSAGES, with the following columns: ADDRESS1, ADDRESS2, ADDRESS3, and ADDRESS_USER (there's a lot more to this table, but those are the important ones). Each row represents a message, and contains the sender's address, recipient's address, and time stamp when the message was sent/received. ADDRESS_USER is unique to each message. What I'm looking to do is, for each ADDRESS_USER, take only the newest row with that ADDRESS_USER, and see what all of the other columns say for each of the addresses with that user's name. I can't figure out how to do this. A: For every address_user, select the latest by time stamp using a select statement to get maximum time stamp. Assuming that

In my page I have a big Title which is cut in 3 parts using CSS3. The Title is coming in Background of the page. When it comes in background, it hides the menu of the page. How to make the menu visible in background and when user click in the menu item, it should redirect to the appropriate page. Thank you. A: You can hide and display it with jQuery as shown here. This example hides the menu, and then redirects to the "ask" url: $(function() { $("#menu").hide(); $(".redirect").click(function(e) { e.preventDefault(); window.location = $(this).attr('url'); }); }); Here's an example of how to toggle the visibility with the display property: $(function() { $("#menu").hide(); $(".toggle").click(function() { $("#menu").css("display", "block"); }, function() { $("#menu").css("display", "none"); }); $(".redirect").click(function(e) { e.preventDefault(); window.location = $(this).attr('url'); }); }); You can also do it without any javascript and just with the CSS property display: #menu { display: none; }
