The Blur filter allows you to soften and smooth an image. Use the boxy button at the bottom of the filter effect list to quickly switch between Normal, Gaussian, and Motion Blur styles. The Paint Bucket removes the specified color or area of an image, leaving no trace of what has been removed. The Pen tool allows you to draw, edit, and correct shapes and other content on an image. The Brush tool, Pen tool, and the Gradient tool are all available on the Tools toolbar. The Eraser tool allows you to erase anything you want on a layer in Photoshop. The Brush tool allows you to apply paint-like colors to your canvas. You can use this tool to create digital patterns that are applied as textures over a layer. The Crop tool allows you to manually cut out a portion of an image to use on its own. Use the arrow buttons at the top and bottom of the tool to precisely crop an image. The Flatten command sorts all layers in a stack, grouping them by their similarity to each other. You can also individually move or rotate layers within a stack. Multiple Layers make it easy to organize and manage multiple effects and colors on a page. You can click the button on the layer palette to add a new layer or choose Edit > New Layer to create a new layer directly from a file. The Erase tool allows you to remove pixels or sections of an image. Use the Toolbox to add colors to the Erase tool. The Spot Healing Brush tool allows you to fix a small area of an image with new colors. The Layer Mask tool allows you to hide and show the individual layers in a file. The Layer Mask panel shows all the information about the layers in a file, including the transparency of each. Use the button at the top right corner to toggle the opacity of the mask. The Brush tool allows you to paint or draw on layers. The tool's settings are accessed by clicking the brush icon on the toolbar. You can use the Liquify filter to make a layer warp or stretch, or shrink to the point of disappearing. This is useful for blurring and slimming down the edges of an image. The Gradient tool allows you to paint a subtle outline of an image on a layer. You can use the Gradient tool to easily add shadows or highlights to an image. You can use the Move and Transform tools to position objects in a layer as you go. You can click and

Dispenser-based sampling to determine aqueous metal speciation in the geology-water-plant-environment continuum. The physical and chemical processes that determine metal contamination in the environment are found in the geology-water-plant-environment continuum. While the physical process of dissolution is the primary process that controls metal contaminants in the environment, the concentration of particulate metals is controlled by the concentration of soluble metal species in the environment. Metal concentrations in soil are determined by either bulk soil concentration or by measurements of the concentration of aqueous metal species in a sample of soil. The aqueous metal species concentrations are controlled by the transport and hydrolysis of dissolved metal in the plant roots, and by the concentration of dissolved metal in the environment. Given the importance of the hydrological processes that control the speciation of metals, we have designed a sampler to determine the concentration of dissolved metal in soil, the concentration of dissolved metal in soil leachate, and the total concentration of dissolved metal in the soil solution. The sampler is composed of a small (1.4 cm diameter) composite sampler with a metal-screening filter at the inlet, a valve to stop flow when samples are taken, and tubing from the sampler to a pressure-compensated thermosensor for measurement of dissolved metal concentration. Laboratory testing of the sampler indicates that it is capable of isolating dissolved metals in soil leachate and soil solution, and is capable of sampling for five hours. When testing the sampler in the field, a polyvinyl chloride (PVC) tube was inserted as a bypass for rain water. The bypass should only be used if rain is expected to contaminate the soil solution, and it is suggested that the bypass should be used only once to determine the soil leachate and soil solution concentrations, and not with sequential samples. Composition of medically used hydroxyapatite. The chemical compositions of small pieces of commercially available hydroxyapatite (HAp) were analyzed by flame atomic absorption spectrometry. The apatite contained a silicate-rich phase, which, by X-ray diffraction, was identified as crude fluorapatite. The silicate-rich phase present in crude fluorapatite was then analyzed by aqueous hydrothermal synthesis in order to obtain sintered, pure fluorapatite. The sintered material was not found to be chemically reactive under the reaction conditions employed. It was
