Pseudoaneurysm of the subclavian artery: complication of radiotherapy and operative intervention. Primary pseudoaneurysm of the subclavian artery complicating radiotherapy has not been described before. Such a pseudoaneurysm occurred in a 50-year-old woman in whom a previously treated cancer of the mandible developed in the right subclavian artery. She underwent excision of the aneurysm, which was 8 x 3.5 cm. This combined approach allowed for complete resection of the aneurysm and for closure of the arteriotomy without arteriovenous fistula. It also allowed sufficient examination of the aneurysm to demonstrate that it was an intramural hematoma and that it was not associated with a penetrating artery of the aortic arch. No recurrence or complications have been encountered 12 months after surgery. We conclude that a primary pseudoaneurysm of the subclavian artery complicating radiotherapy can be removed in a combined approach allowing for good exposure and safe closure of the arteriotomy.

Iglesia Arquelogallería The Iglesia de Arquelogallería (Church of Nautical Arquitecture) is an ecclesiastical building located at the intersection of Calle de Santiago el Mayor and Calle de Castilla in the historic center of Barcelona, Spain. It is a protected

Bien de Interés Cultural monument. It was built between the end of the 13th and the first half of the 15th century. The building has seven naves, and was originally intended for a wider array of religious practices, as it was once part of a multi-functional monastery. Its function as an ecclesiastical edifice had lasted through the Middle Ages, as it hosted and served the Iglesia de Sant Salvador, until it was closed in the 18th century. In the 19th century, the building was used as an armory. After a period of abandonment, restoration was undertaken in 1910, and it was made into a church again in 1967. History At the intersection of Calle del Rector Tarrinyol and Calle de Santiago el Mayor lies an Iglesia de Arquelogallería (Church of Nautical Arquitecture). The construction of the edifice is registered in the archives of the Diocese of Barcelona at no. 17, which date to 1345. The
