We retreated and though we were dry we were ready to be recaptured and get this bike back to where we were parked. The captain agreed. We put the gas in the van and hit the road. It took almost 3 hours. It was horrible to wait that long, listening to the wind slamming against the side of the van. The Border Patrol pulled us over and we were given a ride in a truck to the stations. The Border Patrol guy drove the truck and we followed and followed, finally finding that there were about 8 stations lined up along the border in the Los Banos area and we were in front of Station No. 9. We were told to get out, told to move. The Border Patrol guy took us into the building and then into a room. We never met the agent at the desk or saw anyone. We were told to take off our shoes, get in a corner and wait. It took less than 15 minutes, and then we were told to strip and get in a room. I guess it was a lady desk at the station, and they told us to take off our clothes, then take a shower, we were told not to use the soap and shower out of the tub. We washed with the cool water and then they told us to wash the bottom of the tub. We were given no explanation of why. We were told to dry off and dress. Another agent came into the room, gave us the dark blue crew neck shirt and a short sleeve white shirt. The agent who was taking the clothes from us thanked us for allowing them to take our clothes and we just nodded our heads. We took off the handcuffs, put on the clothing and
